Product beat sales estimates in three consecutive quarters post-launch

The background

Launching a new drug is a complex process that requires juggling multiple priority areas at the same time. Given the expense and market reputation that is tied to a successful launch, companies want to be as meticulous as possible with the launch preparation.

The client—one of the top 10 global pharmaceutical companies—found themselves facing an accelerated launch in the US market. That too for a product that would be the company’s first blockbuster product in years. A lot was at stake. Unfortunately, the client’s existing brand team was understaffed and had limited experience in launching products.

The client knew they needed a partner with launch expertise who could engage senior leadership, build solid launch plans, and take ownership every step of the way. They decided to bank on Citius Healthcare Consulting's expertise.

Solution: Planning is the crux of launch success

Given the tight timelines, Citius Healthcare Consulting brought together a high-octane team with deep experience in product launch. The team worked with 20+ functions to pressure-test their existing launch plans and identify gaps in resources and capabilities. Leveraging best practices to plug these gaps, the team rapidly developed a comprehensive launch plan that included all cross-functional components and their associated milestones. The team also identified and prioritized key strategic issues, such as the potential to expand the launch opportunity through partnerships and business development.

The team also coordinated key actions across various functions and worked with them on an ongoing basis to monitor and update the launch plan, identifying areas of risk along the way for senior leadership. This ensured timely escalations and interventions for a smooth launch. In addition, facilitating workshops with the cross-functional teams and contributing to brand and vendor-led workshops ensured launch readiness.

The Citius team also supported the brand team in developing HCP and consumer campaigns and getting these assets approved through both the client's copy approval process and FDA review/approval.
